USAF pararescue jumpers take part in NASA human space flight support operations exercise.

Parker Jewish Institute Hosts Air Force Pararescue Workshop

Parker Jewish Institute for Health Care and Rehabilitation recently hosted a two-day workshop of the U.S. Air Force Pararescue Medical Operations Advisory Board (MOAB). Participants included Air Force Pararescue Jumpers (PJs) and flight surgeons.

Held in Parker's auditorium, the workshop was directed by Lieutenant Colonel Stephen C. Rush, who is a pararescue flight surgeon and USAF pararescue medical director. The program focused on advanced life-saving skills that are necessary when performing rescues in severe environments.

Michael N. Rosenblut, Parker president and CEO, welcomed the group of Pararescue professionals.

"PJs play an important role in the U.S. Air Force mission by recovering and providing medical care to isolated personnel in combat zones and other extreme environments," said Rosenblut. "You have a monumental responsibility to uphold the Air Force Core Value of 'Service Before Self.' Parker is proud to host the MOAB workshop, so you can review policies and procedures, medications and training. We're here for you."

PJs are the elite combat force specifically organized, trained and equipped to undertake both conventional and unconventional combat and non-combat rescue operations. They are the most highly trained and versatile personnel recovery specialists in the world. Because of their training, PJs are called on to execute the most perilous, demanding and extreme rescue missions anytime, anywhere across the globe.

Missions have included hurricanes Harvey and Irma, the Thailand cave rescue, ongoing support of combat and counter terrorism operations, NASA human space flight support operations and more. Subjects included discussions of recent missions, human performance issues and new ideas for equipment and treatment protocols.

Parker Jewish Institute is a leading provider of short term rehabilitation and long-term care. At the forefront of innovation in patient-centered health care and new technology, the institute is also a leader in teaching and geriatric research.
